Policy for Young Ladies.

It is said "there is policy in way," which is doubtless a fact, but policy is also neces sary in most of the proceedings of lide - -Policy is taking advantage of circumstances, and turning them to the accomplishment of those objects one wishes to secure Policy otherefore necessary far those young lating who wish to a cure good diusbands. flut the policy which most of them pursue is exceedingly erroneous-they seem to m any ordinary frees, about their household affairs But the is the very condition in which every young man who is worth securing, would prefer to find them, of he were seeking for a wife. A foolish, somdressed in silks and shut up in the parlor like dolls in a showease. But a sensible man wants a wife who knows something, and can make herself useful. A judicious writer advises all young men to seek their companions for life from the class who are willing to be found in the kitchen, without making apologies for it. This is sage adthose men who are worth their seeking, generally act upon it, and had rather find them at the wash tob than weeping over away from their work and hide when a
